David Sliter

Vice President and General Manager, Communications and Media Solutions
Hewlett-Packard Company

David Sliter serves as vice president of Products and Solutions in the Communications and Media Solutions (CMS) organization at HP. Sliter is responsible for the design and build of the product and solution management roadmap to strengthen the CMS Software intellectual property (IP) portfolio.

Sliter focuses on enabling the right mix of IP and custom services across customer solutions engagements to increase profitability and reduce risk.

Previously, Sliter was the group general manager for Industry Solutions at Microsoft. During his four-year tenure, he developed software and service solutions aimed at integrating the Microsoft platform into the communications and media industry.

Prior to this role, Sliter held several positions at Nortel, including vice president and general manager of Multimedia Communications, where he developed market segmentation and defined product strategy for key customer segments. Sliter also served as the vice president for Network Services Research and Development at Nortel.

Sliter is a graduate of the microcomputing engineering technology program at St. Lawrence College is Cornwall, Ontario, Canada.